Worried about the recent interest rate rise?

Lots of people are worried about what the latest interest rate increase from the Bank of England means to them – interest rates going up will mean for lots of people that their mortgage will also rise, just as we are seeing rises in costs for everything else.

- If your mortgage is on the lender's standard variable rate then your mortgage will go up, if it hasn't already.
- If your mortgage is on a fixed rate coming to an end in the next 12 months, you might want to take advice as you may be moving to a much more expensive rate when you remortgage.
- If you have a fixed rate mortgage with over a year to go then you might like to diarise for six months before the end to get advice.

Fixing your mortgage interest rate can save a lot of money, if rates are expected to rise in the future, giving you certainty about what your repayments will be for the next few years.
